The REAL STATE

Sharon Bohrer was at school just before the flood of '96, when a friend told her that a house on 38 street slid down the hill. She immediately called home to see if her house was still at her old address, when her husband picked up the phone. Phew! It wasn't hers-it was the next door neighbor's house! It had slid down the hill, crashing into the house in front of it. Fortunately, the resident, who went along for the ride, crawled safely out a window.

Sharon called the city to cut down a tree that was ominously hanging over her roof, but apparently, the trees are holding the bank behind her house in place. However, the bank is moving, and the city explained that so was her house.

Tenuous Tenants

Meanwhile, Sharon hasn't slept in her upstairs bedroom for fear that the tree will land in her bedroom; and when the gas heat goes on, there's a small explosion, while she's seeing electrical surges about 50 times a day. Of course, she's afraid to take her dentures out at night lest she should "lose her teeth in the rubble". Maybe the next rain will decide her fate. Until then, she doesn't know which will happen first: an electrical fire, a gas explosion, a tree through the roof, or a sliding bank that will knock her house off the foundation. I'll keep you posted.

Letters to the Editor.

New Values

by: Mary Perata

This expression of persona opinion was published as a letter to the editor during the last presidential campaign (The Daily Astorian, June 19, 1992). It's just as true now as it was then; I think its bears repeating: Once again our abused senses are pummeled with the call for a return to

"Traditional Family Values":

"Children should be seen and not heard."

"A man's home is his castle."

"A woman's place is in the home."

"If you can't say something nice, don't say anything at all."

"The way to a man's heart is through his stomach."

"A man's life is her work, a woman's life is her man."

"Big boys don't cry."

"Love, honor and obey."

"The man should 'Wear the Pants' in the family."

"Spare the rod and spoil the child."
And last but not least:

"A little lady (or big lady) would never: swear, slump in her chair, wear red, copulate, talk back, kiss on the first date, put her elbows on the table, sit with her knees apart, chew gum, etc., etc., etc."

For a great many of us (I suspect for the vast majority of us) Family Traditions also included such values at verbal abuse, alcoholism, violence and incest. Some traditions are best left to die.

We have new ideas, new ideals. Hopefully, one day they will become our Traditional Family Values. For instance:

Children whose needs are met, instead of being expected to fulfill the needs of their parents; who are valued for who they are, instead of being told who to be; who, instead of learning to obey, learn to make considered decisions and to assume responsibility for those decisions.

Men who can express both their pain and their joy, both their strength and their vulnerability; who get to participate in the childhood of their offspring and like it; each man not "got to" through his stomach (or any other part of his anatomy) but given the dignity of personhood. Neither kings nor fools, men are people too.

Women whose "place" is the result of their own choosing; who are free to say "yes" or "no" to parenthood; whose careers are chosen rather than assigned. People of all sizes, shapes and shades of color who are free to speak their truths and even to "tell" (abuse that goes on in secret can go on forever) without regard to "nice" of fear of reprisal; who prefer "intimate" to "dependent"; for whom relationships are based, not on "tight buns" or "big bucks" but on communication and trust; who are free to feel what they feel, think what they think.

If the flip side of freedom is responsibility, then by god, the flip side of responsibility had better be freedom.

PIGS AND MEN

What is the difference between the two?
PIGS.

1. PIGS. Pigs have legs, four of them.
2. Male pigs have donges, or a penis as it may be called, for sex, and urinating.
3. Pigs eat food, although it may be slop, off the ground.
4. Pigs get butchered, or done in.
5. Pigs have feelings.
6. Pigs can squeal when they get poked or prodded.

Pigs cont.

7. Pigs will follow a female around all day looking to get some.
8. Pigs are fat and lazy.
9. Pigs are messy, and don't keep house very well
10. Pigs don't have to worry about lifting, or dropping the seat.

MEN.

1. MEN. Men have legs, two of them.
2. Men or males have dongs, or a penis as it may be called, for sex, and urinating.
3. Men eat food, although it may be slop, off a messy table.
4. Men get butchered, or done in.
5. Men have feelings.
6. Men can squeal when they get poked or prodded.
7. Men will follow a female around all day looking to get some.
8. Men are fat and lazy, some of them.
9. Men are messy, and don't keep house very well, some times.
10. Men according to women don't drop the seat

Well, it looks like all we have is only one major difference between the two, but is that really all or is there more.

Lets look further in to this profound and puzzling problem to see if we can find any more to compare with. Below you will see a short list of some differences

MEN

1. Games. Any of the pieces used in a board game, such as chess or checkers.
2. A human being whatever sex or age; A person.
3. Offensive Slang. Used as a disparaging term for a police officer.

4. Slang. A member of the social or political establishment, especially one holding sexist or racist views.

PIGS.

1. Slang. To eat ravenously; gorge oneself.
2. Informal. A person regarded as being pig like, greedy, or gross.
3. pig in a poke. Something that is offered in a manner that conceals its true nature or value.

Strange, isn't it, that the phrase 'Pig In A Poke' can also refer to a blind date, either on the men or woman's side.

4. A crude block of metal, chiefly iron or lead, poured from a smelting furnace. b. A mold in which such metal is cast. c. Pig iron.

5. Offensive Slang. Used as a disparaging term for a police officer.

A man can be called a pig, or pigheaded, or piggish, but in no way does it mean that they are really pigs, just that they are messy sometimes, stubborn sometimes, and greedy sometimes. A man, can speak "Pig Latin", but then, can't a woman be and do the same, and if so, shouldn't she be called a pig too.

THE WRITERS CORNER

LOOK UP

By Valerie Meldrum

I've always loved to read. I remember a Western I read in grade school; I read the first paragraph over and over-the picture was so vivid. A deer grazed in a meadow of tall green grass, surrounded by towering trees whose branches rumbled in the wind. I had a love and a familiarity with these scenes since I grew up in Lewis and Clark-also surrounded by trees, fields, and boggy places where my brother hunted bullfrogs.

Can you picture this? One day, my mom gave me a Mary Tyler Moore perm after a piteous cry to my dad yielded no help. Maybe he was as helpless as me. Afterwards, I was immediately joining in uncontrollable excitement by the alert that a herd of elk was in the field at the end of our road. Of course it was raining and I was severely scolded for possibly ruining my perm- which was no great loss in the early '70's. Maybe I always appreciated the world God made, and was introspective about the thoughts and feelings I had. It was a perfect marriage then, between images and feelings.

One of the earliest memorable books I've ever read was called Bristle

Face; It also was set in the 1800's, as the first pages reveal a young boy in overalls and a straw hat, walking down a dirt road, when rustling bushes produce a bushy puppy. It was during the pages of this book that my mom turned off the vacuum cleaner, burst into my bedroom, and announced that because of me, my dad was going to take us away from her. Her hysteria resounds in my ears even now. In reference to that awful experience, I remember my dad coming to talk to me in the playground at the school. He knelt down in his Levis and work boots, where I innocently divulged that my mom's boyfriend spent the night; he didn't realize that to his 10-year-old daughter, that just meant that he was at our home when I went to bed. To this day, I am sensitive to 'pumping' children for information, which in the process of self-serving purposes, could also hurt them.

But, I am thankful that through all the pain that we are all familiar with, that I can be appreciative today, retaining a ability to, however cliché', smell the roses. Conscious, alive, and alert to my feelings, and others' and the beautiful things God has put in this world to enjoy.

Sadness and desperation have again visited my life-which promises to change all the major areas of my life: where I live, if I go to school, to name a few. But moving will be the saddest. Like tonight, and many nights in the past months, as I lay in bed, moonlight shines through my window, falling across my covers-bright white; and towering trees three to five times the height of my two-story apartment are silhouetted against the sky, and stars twinkle behind them. The beloved sound of wind in the branches sings to my ears. We have loved living here. And here, I have loved my kids and been loved by them.

I take such joy in my awareness... and love to write rich descriptions, and search for places and situations that provide them.

I heard our owl outside last night; I opened my sliding glass door so I could hear him clearly. I'm sad I'll have to leave, and hope that our next place is surrounded by towering trees and a resident owl. But still, nothing has taken away the ability for me to feel and see beauty around me.

SPECIAL REQUEST

Handicapped Treatment

Recently people have been parking in the handicap spaces. Please have consideration for others less fortunate. The area by the computer lab is for handicapped and emergencies only. Those green stickers do not mean you can park there. They are for emergencies; if you break down or are unable to move your car. So, please, be considerate those that need it more than you. Please leave it open for the handicapped.

Bulletin Staff would like to encourage all student body to continue to petition for a more handicap accessible campus where all students have better access to a quality education.

Please! Contact ASBG to renew or turn in your lockers. Soon all those who are not caught up will be evicted.

Maxine's

Maxine's hours are:

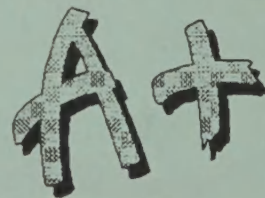

Monday-Thursday from morning to 6:00pm and Friday from morning to 4:00pm. Please be considerate of those who would like to "eat." Please Limit studying to the large tables. Thanks.

There is a calendar in the ASBG office on the March/April/May Hult Center Events. Come by and check it out. You may find an interesting event you would like to go to.

Movie Review

I was really looking forward to seeing Mary Reilly Friday, but it was only showing at the latest hour, so I went to see Broken Arrow. It was no runner up! John Travolta was as sinister as Arnold Schwarzenegger in the first "Terminator", Christian Slater was as masculine as a young Clint Eastwood; the bass guitar was well timed in tense moments-and reminded me of the theme song from "Twin Peaks". This movie tested everyone's nerves, as I observed of the man who was sitting nearest to me. There were so many close calls, that if inexperienced film-makers made this one, there would have been casualties. Take the nerve test and go see this one.

ATTENTION C.C.C. STUDENT BODY!

The HeartStart program is here! For any student interested in obtaining C.P.R. certification, it is now available, free of charge, to all Clatsop County resident. The only exception to the free training is to those who must have it for nursing or other obligations. The fund was established to train the public to bring down ambulance service costs, not to train people in industry or business.

PHI Theta Kappa is sponsoring the program at C.C.C. in affiliation with Medix and The Clatsop County Chapter of the American Red Cross to give the student body, as well as county residents, the ability to receive this valuable training for no charge, using C.C.C.'s facilities.

Please fill out the questionnaire and turn it into Student Services so the sponsors can prepare for the amount of students needing the training. Once the data has been processed, PHI Theta Kappa will issue sign-up sheets in designated areas on campus so the training will be readily available to all students. Remember, this training is not just for the student body, so bring a friend or family members and learn C.P.R. together.
